

Coarse Grained Locking

Coarse grained is pretty simple, we just lock any code that calls add, xremove, or query

We do this using a mutex that gets locked in `interpret_command` .

It locks before any of those three calls, then unlocks when the function returns

This ensures than any database access is only done by one thread at a time.